Stop Passing Notes!

By Thadeus Greenson

thad@northcoastjournal.com

Dean Glaser hit the nail on the head. It was back in April and the Fortuna city councilman was responding to a Journal California Public Records Act request seeking all emails and text messages sent and received by him and his cohorts during a pair of council meetings.

"I never had my phone used at all during those specified dates and times," Glaser wrote to City Manager Mark Wheatley, who had distributed our request to councilmembers, asking them to preserve any texts or emails sent on the specified dates and times. "Meetings are for business — not text sending or receiving. How this idiot is coming up with a scandal surprises me big time!"

While I might take issue with his descriptor of yours truly, I agree that elected officials shouldn't be texting or emailing from the dais at public meetings. Those meetings are at the core of an elected official's duties, and I want — no, expect — them to pay attention, listen to staff reports and public testimony as they make decisions on our behalf. Additionally, I want to make sure that any input they are receiving on those decisions is received in the full light of day. And if they are busy texting about the latest Game of Thrones plot twist instead of listening to testimony on an agenda item, I think the public has a right to know what was so important as to demand their attention.

Earlier this year, someone told me that they had noticed members of elected boards in Humboldt County using cell phones and tablets frequently during public meetings and had come to believe they may be using them to send emails or text messages to communicate with people outside the scope of the public meeting. Upon reflection, I realized that I, too, had seen electeds using their electronic devices during meetings. I asked around to some folks who frequent such meetings and they agreed, yes, it's fairly common.

There are plenty of innocent explanations. The officials could be using them to take notes or follow along with staff reports, or to reference notes they'd made before the meeting. All of this would, of course, be perfectly acceptable. But we wanted to see if this was the case.

So we sent off virtually identical requests to the Humboldt County Board of Supervisors and city councils in Arcata, Eureka and

Fortuna, looking for emails and texts sent and received by supervisors and councilmembers — on both their private and public accounts — during two meetings, one that had something controversial on the agenda and one we randomly selected. All the agencies turned over the requested documents except Eureka. (More on that later.)

The responses we got were interesting. Fortuna responded within the required 10-day timeframe and had a couple texts to turn over from Councilmember Tiara Brown, in addition to Glaser's "idiot" blast. During the council's March 22 meeting, in which the council directed staff to draft an ordinance prohibiting commercial cannabis businesses within city limits, Brown sent a couple of text messages to City Clerk Linda McGill. The second read: "Has there been any direction about commercial grows working the city? Did I miss it?" McGill responded: "We don't want any I believe."

Arcata also responded promptly to our request, turning over a small batch of documents that mostly just included incoming emails to councilmembers. There were two exceptions, both from then Councilmember Wheatley. He responded to a text message about 10 minutes into the council's Jan. 4 meeting to tell someone he was in said meeting and put the conversation off until the next day. Later in the same meeting, he sent Police Chief Tom Chapman a text to ask if Proposition 64 addresses butane. Chapman responded that it doesn't, but pointed the councilman to Assembly Bill 2679, which does.

From the county, we received a large stack of emails, most of which consisted of email blasts that landed in all supervisors' accounts or incoming emails from constituents. But four supervisors — Rex Bohn, Virginia Bass, Estelle Fennell and Ryan Sundberg — also sent emails during the meetings in question.

Frankly, none seemed terribly interesting. Bohn and Bass sent one apiece, both on the subject of the board considering reappointing then Planning Commissioner Lee Ulansey, but neither contained anything of substance. Fennell, meanwhile, sent an email to Clerk of the Board Kathy Hayes asking where a human rights commissioner is from, one to Health and Human Services Director Connie Beck to compliment her on a testimonial Beck had forwarded from a department social worker and one to Public Works in response to an email she got from a constituent that morning reporting flooding and road closures in the Palomino Estates. Sundberg forwarded the McKinleyville Community Services District director an "FYI" about an upcoming workshop, responded to a constituent's question about ADA requirements for "cultivation rooms" and told someone from the California Association of Councils and Government it was "no big deal" that she'd yet to process his forum registration payment.

While I don't see any "scandal" here, to use Glaser's word (at least in what was disclosed ... folks should remember the CPRA works largely on the honor system), I do think the topic is of interest. Call me old fashioned, but I don't want my elected officials privately asking staff members questions during open meetings — if there's something so important and germane to the issue that it can't wait, it should be asked in open session so the public can hear the answer. I also don't want my electeds responding to constituent emails that can be handled later during a public meeting, when their attention should be on the topics at hand and the speakers addressing them. (The exception here, I think, is Fennell making sure Public Works was aware of a constituent's flooding emergency.)

If there is a scandal, I believe it's in the way Eureka handled our request. Eureka City Attorney Cyndy Day-Wilson responded to say she'd reviewed records related to our request and found zero pages to be "disclosable." (Interestingly, a few days after denying our request, Day-Wilson put a proposed Code of Ethics before the council that included the line, "Councilmembers ... shall not use their electronic devices to conduct city business during meetings.")

After a bit of back and forth, Day-Wilson indicated the city had found emails and texts responsive to our request but didn't deem them public records because they are "personal in nature, and contain no more than incidental mentions of agency business."

We found two large problems with this. First, we have a hard time wrapping our heads around the notion that texts or emails sent by a councilmember from the dais during a public meeting shouldn't inherently be a public record. Second, we have a hard time simply taking the city's word for it at this point. After all, this is the same city and city attorney who insisted there were no records responsive to our request for correspondences about the clearing of the PalCo Marsh until we threatened litigation, at which point they produced more than 11,000 pages, and the same folks who insisted a video of a controversial arrest on a public street was a "confidential personnel record" until four judges told them it wasn't. That's not the best track record of erring on the side of public disclosure and, frankly, it's a sad statement that we don't trust Humboldt County's largest city to make these determinations in line with the public's best interest and the law.

So, reluctantly, we went to court, filing a petition in July asking a judge to review the emails and text messages in question and determine if they are, in fact, public documents. Further, we argued that even if most of the information in the texts and emails is deemed private, the public would have an interest in seeing copies with all the personal information redacted, to at least get an idea of how much time councilmembers are spending on the dais dealing with their private affairs.

Earlier this month, after hearing arguments on Aug. 7, Humboldt County Superior Court Judge Timothy Cissna denied the Journal's request, finding that the city followed the procedure set out in existing case law for reviewing the documents in question. But Cissna acknowledged that it is a "difficult line to be drawn," that there's a lack of "specific guidance" in the law for handling such requests and no official determination of how to treat "private" messages elected officials may send on "public time." (Visit www.northcoastjournal.com to view Cissna's complete ruling, as well as all filings in the case.)

Attorney Paul Nicholas Boylan, who represented the Journal in the case, said Cissna's ruling is fair.

"The written order is a model for a well-written, well-reasoned judicial opinion," Boylan said. "And it is honest. Judge Cissna openly recognizes that both he and other courts lack the statutory or appellate guidance on these kinds of records access issues and that appellate review of his order is not just likely, but necessary to provide that guidance. I agree."

So do we, which is why we'll be appealing Cissna's ruling. We believe the public has a fundamental and necessary right to monitor the performance of those we elect to make decisions on our behalf. And if a councilmember is passing notes — public or private — while ostensibly carrying out the most important function of his or her office, we think the public should get to see them.

'Paucity of Empathy'

Editor:

All the anger that resides in the dark places of my soul dissolves into the tears of sadness that upwell from the evocations of misery and hope that spill out from the focals of electricity placed in fervent expression on the pages placed at my perusal [NC], Oct. 26, pages 6 ("Away from the Rain"), 11 (NCJ Daily), 12 ("A Homeless Survival Guide") 18 ("Sharktober Part 4").

Survival is a process amended by good and bad fortune for everyone of us from the moment of our first sunshine to the last darkness. Sometimes we plod unaware thru much of our lives, sometimes life strikes us in ways so overwhelming that just to breath is a chore. It is then that just a little help restores our humanity. It is here, this humanity, the outside source of our survival, that is in such short supply.

It is here that I am transfixed by the inordinate paucity of empathy in our society. It is here that I am immobilized by the anti-people policies of so many who purport to be protecting our propinquity, but instead protect only their own narrow provenance.

Ah, yes, with five college degrees I can rail against the inequities. With my secure position in the firmament, the clear glassy sea of acceptable existence, I can hide from those whose stone-clod hearts leave little room for any vagaries. But it is with my less fortunate brothers and sisters that I most identify, and whose internality with the Common Good I most cherish. It is here that the nature of humanness transcends to heights extolled but seldom practiced. It is here that we can resist NIM-BY and reach out to others as we would have others reach out to us.

Larry Hourany, McKinleyville

An 'Obvious' Crisis

Editor:

Regarding "Away from the Rain" (Oct. 25), there's a fairy tale about an old woman who, while baking, is asked by a beggar for a cake. The one she's baking is too big to give away so she starts a smaller one. But every time, the cake grows too big for her to part with it.

She finally turns the beggar away with nothing.

The Humboldt County Board of Supervisors is like that old woman. With everybody and his grandmother making oven-fulls of money in the marijuana business and with winter coming on, it doles out tiny cakes to our less fortunate but numerous (top-five per capita nationwide) population of people without homes. Tiny cakes to small numbers of homeless people who will submit to the rules imposed on them to get away from the rain temporarily.

That there is a shelter crisis has been obvious for several years. Many of the patients at our clinic live in their cars, inject their insulin in their cars, use their back seats as a bathroom, spend sleepless nights finding a place to park where they won't be found by the police.

Or shiver on rafts in concealed ditches while their beloved dogs stand belly deep in water.

Whether or not they use drugs is completely irrelevant. That's a different fairytale: it's Andersen's Little Match Girl.

Considering that homeless people live shorter lives than the rest of us by 25 years, we are getting perilously close to Duterte's method of solving the homeless problem in the Philippines. Urge the BOS to change its stingy ways at its Nov. 7 meeting and declare a crisis.

Ellen Taylor, Petrolia

Gravity and Light

Editor:

A common question relating to the LIGO story by Barry Evans (Field Notes, Oct. 26) is "how can light beams detect gravity waves when light and matter are equally stretched and shrunk by passing gravity waves?"

The answer lies in the constancy of the speed of light, so that a stretched light wave has a lower frequency. The two light beams no longer cancel each other after traveling different lengths at the same speed (even though the lengths differ by way less than the diameter of a proton!). I urge Barry to follow his story with LIGO's fantastic detection of merging neutron stars.

Don Garlick, Fieldbrook

More Hager, Please

Editor:

Thank you for printing Bob Hager's tips for those living without a home ("A Homeless Survival Guide," Oct. 26).

I would find it valuable to hear more regularly from Mr. Hager, and not just about homelessness.

We hear often from politicians, activists, professional social workers and those who have chosen journalism as a career. We rarely get to hear, directly, the perspective of someone who is themselves without a home.

I realize that no one person can speak for "the homeless" any more than one person can legitimately speak for "Americans," "women" or "the left." Still, hearing from one such person beats hearing from none.

Thanks also for the job you've done responding to the murder of Josiah Lawson, and in responding to the increasingly visible aspects of our country that I'll simply call Trump, knowing that anyone who hears that will know exactly to what I refer.

Mitch Trachtenberg, Trinidad

Editor's note: Bob Hager has already accepted the Journal's offer to become a regular columnist, with freedom to write about a range of subjects.

Correction

An article headlined "Away from the Rain" in the Oct. 26, 2017, edition of the North Coast Journal inaccurately paraphrased Peg Anderson, who has worked with the Southern Humboldt Emergency Shelter Group on efforts to start up an emergency weather shelter for homeless people this winter. Anderson said potential shelter volunteers should be prepared to deal with a variety of personalities. The Journal regrets the error.

Clarifications

A review headlined "Microcosm of Life on Avenue Q" in the Oct. 26, 2017, edition of the North Coast Journal stated that Nichole Riffenburgh recently played Mary Poppins and Marticia Adams. To clarify, these productions were in Ventura, California, not Humboldt County. The Journal regrets any confusion.

A column in the Oct. 26, 2017, edition of the North Coast Journal included information that may have been confusing to some readers. The column quoted from a letter five environmental groups sent to the county of Humboldt urging it not to issue additional cannabis cultivation permits until it can crack down on those currently operating out of compliance. The letter was written specifically in response to the county's proposal to extend its medical cannabis land use ordinance to include commercial recreational growing operations. The Journal regrets any confusion.

The General Concerns

By Marcy Burstiner

mediamaven@northcoastjournal.com

Seeing The General at Arcata High School last month totally changed how I view the Civil War. The silent film about a battle between the Confederate and Union armies premiered in 1926 and stars Buster Keaton. Last month, students from Arcata and McKinleyville high schools, in the ArMack Orchestra, performed a live score to the movie under the direction of music teacher Cassandra Moulton. Now, I didn't actually buy a Confederate flag afterward, but I did find myself cheering for the Confederate Army during the movie. And that was weird.

Ridiculous? Not as ridiculous as this: Moulton felt she needed to apologize to parents of students at the two schools for choosing the movie.

In the movie, Keaton plays a railroad conductor in the South who is in love with a girl whose father and brother enlist when the war breaks out. They expect him to as well, but the army needs him for the railroad and rejects him without telling him why. His sweetheart thinks he's just a coward. She gets kidnapped by Union spies and he goes off to rescue her. After an exciting railroad chase and lots of hysterical slapstick, he ends up saving her and the Confederate Army. The boys in gray demolish the Union army in battle. And we can't help but cheer.

I took my 12-year-old daughter to see it. She's at the age where she has to be dragged out of the house so you can imagine how thrilled she was at the prospect of seeing a black and white movie with no sound! But she loved it. The musicians were excellent.

It was weird to cheer for the Confederate Army at the end. But it was a movie. For 67 minutes the Union soldiers were bad. Then the movie was over and I remembered, oh yeah, this was a war fought over slavery and the Union Army was on the side of emancipation. The movie didn't brainwash me. It mostly went over my daughter's head because she knows zip about the Civil War. They don't teach it in California schools until eighth grade.

But enough parents complained — about the movie, not about the total lack of education about the Civil War in elementary school — that Moulton felt compelled to send out a letter of apology.

"It was not my intent in choosing the film to promote any celebration of the Confederate cause past, present or future," she wrote. "Furthermore, I take full responsibility for the selection of the film and for choosing to perform the rented score."

She admitted that she had not viewed the film before purchasing it and became concerned when she and her students viewed it for the first time. But by that time, it was too late to get another movie and score to master, and it also would have been financially difficult to do so, regardless. She made her choice based on a description of the film as a "beautiful, inventive, locomotive chase set in the Civil War." It had not occurred to her that in the movie, the South would win.

Should she have done more research prior to buying it? Maybe. But this is high school, not grade school. The American Film Institute, a national organization dedicated to preserving films and educating filmmakers, ranks The General No. 18 on the list of greatest American movies of all time and as second best silent movie. (Only Charlie Chaplin's City Lights ranks higher.)

In this paper in 2010, Bob Doran wrote: "Any student of silent movies knows The General. Buster Keaton's highly refined slapstick tale of a runaway Civil War train is a classic of early cinema." That was when local musician Greg Moore screened The General against his original score performed by a six-piece band at the Arcata Playhouse. The performances sold out.

I am so grateful to Moulton for screening The General. My daughter has an appreciation now for silent movies. As for the storyline, we had a discussion about it afterward but it went over her head. As far as she was concerned, the good guys were the good guys and the bad guys were the bad guys. It was just a funny movie about a guy trying to rescue his sweetheart.

I don't need my daughter's teachers to prescreen books or movies deemed classics. I fear that a small group of parents could keep thought-provoking material out of schools by giving teachers a hard time for the choices they make.

What was needed at the screening of The General was a discussion before or after the movie to put the storyline into context. Keaton based it on a true story — the Confederate Army did win that battle the movie portrays.

With so little funding and support of arts education around the country, particularly in rural areas, we should be grateful we have programs like the ArMack Orchestra and teachers like Moulton who believe in students enough to give them sophisticated projects. When Greg Moore screened The General in 2010, he performed the score with some of the most accomplished musicians in the county, telling Doran, "It's a complicated thing. There's a lot of music to learn and it all needs to line up with the action of the film."

Moulton wrote in her apology letter that once the academic year begins it is almost impossible to change the busy school calendar, which left her with the choice of sticking with the screening or canceling the event. "I decided to push ahead with the film," she wrote. "It was the wrong decision and I now realize that I should have consulted my administrative team for guidance in this decision, and will do so should I have any reservations in the future."

No. You made the right decision, Ms. Moulton. There was no sex or racial stereotypes in this movie. There was one troubling concept — that for the purpose of a movie plot, Confederate soldiers were the good guys. It was a simplistic movie representation of the most complicated part of our nation's history. Instead of nixing the screening, the school could have used it for all kinds of teaching opportunities in social studies classes.

This was the second time I've seen a silent movie accompanied by the ArMack Orchestra. I can't wait to see what they do next year.

Sex, Lies & Where You Should Vape

By Linda Stansberry
linda@northcoastjournal.com

Dear journalists and cannabis content generators, In previous columns, we've discussed how it's irresponsible/dumb to do "stunt journalism," like drinking entire bottles of weed lube, and reductive/boring to infuse every possible facet of modern life and cuisine with the phrase "cannabis infused," but here we are again, critiquing some stupid, inaccurate, click-bait headlines.

First, Gov. Jerry Brown did not say, "Californians Can Smoke and Vape in Parks, on Beaches," (Cannabist, Oct. 9) or "[OK] Marijuana Use at State Parks, Beaches" (Marijuana Business Daily, Oct. 9). Brown vetoed Senate Bill 386, which would have banned smoking of all kinds in parks and on beaches. Not that anyone's enforcing it, but smoking pot in public is still illegal, including at your favorite surf spot. Sorry. The more interesting story is that Brown, who's often portrayed as an overreaching, big government enviro nut, chose to reject the bill, saying it was "too broad" and "there must be some limit to the coercive power of government." But as our media consumption becomes ever-more curated, some people are only going to get their news from within an emerald bubble. A bubble that includes this column, I guess.

Second, "Does Smoking Pot Lead to More Sex?" National Public Radio (Oct. 27) is just asking the questions. As are CNN, "Marijuana: Regular Users Have More Sex," and Forbes, "Heavier Pot Use Linked to More Sex, Study Suggests." I feel for the writers who saw this Stanford study come across the wire and realized they had struck clickbait gold. Sex. Pot. Woo.

But it really is a whole lot of woo, in the old-timey medicine cart way. The study, conducted by the Stanford University School of Medicine and published in the Journal of Sexual Medicine, comes from an analysis of more than 50,000 Americans between ages 25 and 45. What it found is not a causal connection, but rather a correlation. People who smoke pot seem to have sex more often, according to self-reported data. How much more sex? About one time more a month on average than non-smokers. Considering a lot of the negative press around pot and sex — studies that indicate a lower sex drive, a lower sperm count, the inadvisability of initiating intercourse with chip crumbs on your fingers — this is good news. But how good are the headlines, particularly the Forbes one? Well, not great.

"It doesn't say if you smoke more marijuana, you'll have more sex," the study's senior author, Michael Eisenberg, an assistant professor of urology, told Stanford's news center.

In accuracy-infused news, Corona beer's parent company, Constellation Brands, may be launching a "cannabis-infused" beverage at some point. According to the Chicago Tribune, the alcohol giant announced plans on Monday to buy a significant stake in Canopy Growth Corp., a Canadian medical marijuana company, with an eye toward launching a weedy (non-alcoholic) drink in that country, perhaps as early as July, when recreational cannabis use becomes legal nationwide. This would be the first entry of a major alcohol distributor into the nascent weed industry, which is definitely noteworthy, but Constellation has stated it has no plans to advance into the U.S. market until we've also fully legalized recreational cannabis. So if you can't live without drinking your THC, to say nothing of universal healthcare, move north.

Finally, we see you, New Jersey state attorney general. Law enforcement agencies in the Garden State distributed some scare-mongering literature from the A.G. warning parents to watch out for "cannabis edibles" in their kids' Halloween buckets. While there is a well-documented rise in kids accidentally eating their parents' stash and such in post-legalization Colorado, it seems extremely unlikely that anyone is donating their expensive edibles to little witches, either purposefully or accidentally. Moreover, there are exactly zero documented instances of this happening anywhere, although some of the headlines you'll see flit across your social media feeds might indicate otherwise. To which I say: Boo. ●

Trick or treat options ranged from candy to rocks (surprisingly popular!) in Old Town in Eureka on Saturday afternoon. A large crowd of costumed superheroes, Wonder Women, popular action and Pokémon characters, as well as costumed parents, wandered from participating stores on First, Second and Third streets to pick up the mostly sugary treats. # Play It Forward

Arcata's Greenview Park breaks new ground by taking down barriers

By Kimberly Wear

Sebastian Baker pushes Josephine Boyd on the zipline.

When Ernesto Cappuccio arrived in Arcata with his family just over four years ago, a lot about his life changed. There were all the usual things that such a move entails for a fifth grader, which in this case included starting over at a new school in a small town where everyone seemed to have known each other forever.

But that wasn't the hardest part. It turned out that a seemingly simple thing proved to be one of the toughest adjustments — he could no longer play basketball.

Born with spina bifida, Ernesto uses a wheelchair. Back when he lived in the Bay Area enclave of Livermore, the now 15-year-old was part of a competitive basketball team that had access to a court with an adjustable hoop. But here in Humboldt County, there were no similar programs.

And while there was a park with a court just down the street from his new house in Arcata's Greenview neighborhood, the lone basket stood at regulation height and Ernesto was blocked from using it by a swath of grass that was difficult, if not impossible, for his wheelchair to traverse.

"It was in the back and there was no way to get to it," Ernesto says. "No way. No how."

When his two younger sisters — Chloe and Zoe — played on the swings or climbed the jungle gym, Ernesto was often relegated to the sidelines, or — more accurately — the sidewalk.

And considering that he not only played competitive basketball and sled hockey, but also went caving and rock climbing through the nonprofit Bay Area Outreach and Recreation Program, Ernesto was not accustomed to sitting things out.

Now an Arcata High School freshman, he's on the track and field team in discus and shot put, while also playing trumpet in the orchestra.

"It was tough," Ernesto says of the move. "I liked to do all of those sports. They were fun."

So, when neighbor Daniel Bixler organized a meeting in the spring of 2015 to look at replacing Greenview Park's outdated equipment, Ernesto and his father Frank went to talk about more than just what play structures should be installed.

They went to talk about access for everyone. And they were not alone.

Bixler says he still becomes emotional when thinking about the families who came forward in those early planning stages to explain how playgrounds are often symbols of isolation to their children.

Instead of welcoming places to shoot a few hoops or zoom down slides with abandon, the combination of a lack of access and equipment they could use made the parks seem more like exclusive clubs that didn't include them on the guest list.

The father of two young daughters, Bixler says he couldn't believe he'd missed what should have been so obvious.

"It was more than a lightbulb that went off," he says, recalling he immediately turned to Dan

Diemer, then the city's parks superintendent, and asked, "What would it take?"

What it was going to take was money, about twice as much as a traditional playground build, not just for the specialized play equipment but also to install wheelchair-friendly surfaces and things like accessible picnic tables.

Instead of around $150,000, the project would cost upward of $300,000.

With his eyes now opened wide, the owner of Humboldt Hot Sauce knew there was only one way forward and the stage was set for Arcata's first fully inclusive playground. Then the hard work began.

"There was no turning back," Bixler recalls.

Playgrounds haven't always been the neighborhood fixtures that most people now take for granted. The idea first appeared around the mid-1800s, in the wake of the Industrial Revolution, to offer children a safe place to play and respite from the bleak tenement life so many faced in inner cities.

With the baby boom following World War II and the rise of suburban neighborhoods, playgrounds became more common place and have continued to evolve over the years, embraced not only for providing needed green space amid urban sprawl but also as an outlet for unfettered play that helps children learn to interact and use their imaginations.

But there's also a more serious side — psst, don't tell the kids — especially for children with developmental delays.

All that playing builds physical coordination, which in turn helps kids who have trouble navigating the complicated dance of social interaction to develop those skills, according to Jayne McGuire, a professor of recreation administration at Humboldt State University.

Children who might have a tough time

communicating can find themselves on more even ground with their peers when they can go head-to-head on the monkey bars just like everyone else, she says.

As an added benefit, those skills can develop faster on playgrounds than with rote exercises because the kids are simply having fun, McGuire notes.

"They're little microcosms of social engagement that develop a sense of self and a sense of independence," says McGuire, who consulted on Greenview Park's design. "It lets parents take that one step back and let their kids be kids."

Along that vein, inclusive playgrounds are gaining a foothold following the passage of the Americans With Disabilities Act and special education laws in the 1990s.

McGuire notes that inclusive playgrounds are not just for children who might have difficulties using traditional play structures. They ensure there is something for everyone to enjoy — and to enjoy together.

"The goal is that everyone plays side-by-side and we break down those barriers," she says.

While it's hard to quantify how many now exist, National Public Radio's "Playgrounds for Everyone" app — which crowdsources locations and information on the growing movement — lists nearly 3,000 inclusive playgrounds in the United States.

For Mara Kaplan, founder of Let Kids Play, a Pittsburgh-based national consulting firm on inclusive play areas, the importance of making sure all children and adults have access to playgrounds can't be overstated.

The mother of a special needs son, Kaplan knows first-hand the heartbreak of not being able to do what so many people take for granted — spending a day at the park with her children.

"It really isolates a family and takes them out of the community when you don't make the community inclusive and welcoming for everybody," she says.

While there are ADA requirements for newer parks, both Kaplan and McGuire say those are "low bars" that mainly address access.

"ADA might get my son to the playground, but it doesn't necessarily get him through the playground and it doesn't mean there is anything for him to do at the playground," Kaplan says.

But things have changed by leaps and bounds in the 24 years since her son was born, with many communities, like Arcata, embracing the idea that making inclusive playgrounds can be the rule, rather than the exception, to the benefit of everyone.

"You see children learn about one another in a way that no other place else than a playground can be," Kaplan says. "A playground is normalizing."

While Arcata might not have been on the forefront of fully inclusive playgrounds, the city is now moving toward leading the nation by making Greenview Park just the starting point.

"We hope it will be the first of what will be many," says Julie Neander, the city's director of Community Services. "That is our goal. ... It means it will cost us more money but it's so worth it. We want our parks to be for everyone."

This past Saturday marked a major milestone when, after more than two years of planning, fundraising and hard work, Greenview Park officially opened to a crowd of about 200 who gathered at the one-acre site tucked into a cul-de-sac off 11th Street.

If it takes a village to raise a child, it also took one to reinvent Greenview Park.

Between the spare change dropped into collection cans, $200,000 in state funds granted to Arcata because of its commitment to affordable housing and the donations of community members and local businesses, more than $300,000 was raised.

"Our world is better by our actions," Bixler told the crowd in a voice choked with emotion.

As children scrambled across the spongy green and black speckled matting that replaced the grass to explore their new space, grownups wandered about the vibrant yellow, orange and blue play structures, where once only meager swing sets and a lone steel jungle gym the color of a dreary Humboldt day stood.

There are still swings, but this set includes one with a specialized seat to strap in children who might not have the ability to hold on for themselves. Near the entrance, a sensory wall with patterns to trace and music makers to play stands at the ready, along with the obligatory climbing structure and side-by-side slides.

Toward the back and off to the side, sits a dome that can be scaled while also providing a quiet refuge inside for autistic children who can become overwhelmed by sensory overload.

There is also a sway glider with a ramp to accommodate wheelchairs that rocks back and forth.

None went unused. Still in the back but with a paved path leading the way, there is a basketball court with an adjustable hoop.

By far the most popular feature on Saturday was a zip line structure with a large chair resembling a child's car seat that zooms back and forth along a track on the park's outer edge, the idea of Zoe Cappuccio — Ernesto's 8-year-old sister.

Standing at the head of a long line waiting to take a turn, her sister Chloe could not be happier with result.

The pair — like the rest of the family — took part in the park's fundraising, with the girls setting up a lemonade stand that raised $60 for the cause.

"I think it's fun," Chloe says of the zip line. "It feels like you're flying."

What started out as a simple renovation project had transformed into something much more — a place with something for everyone, where children and adults, regardless of whether they are blind or deaf, autistic or use a wheelchair, can mingle and play — together.

Calling Greenview Park "a great example of collaboration," Bixler notes his tiny Arcata neighborhood now boasts the only fully inclusive playground in the 350-mile stretch between Oakland and Medford, Oregon.

After Ernesto cut the opening day ribbon, Bixler was there to give him a high five.

As the celebration in the park continued, Lucy Bixler stopped by the sign with glass blocks denoting the 66 donors who gave more than $250 toward the effort — proudly pointing out the block with her and her sister Bella's names.

Her father says that, years from now, his girls and other children will still be able to look up at those names and know there were people who cared enough about them and their community to make a difference.

"I think it's going to work out very well for everyone," Bixler says.

The Gift of Rice

New Orleans chef Kevin Belton's Jambalaya

By Andrea Juarez

tabletalk@northcoastjournal.com

Luscious oyster and artichoke soup, shrimp remoulade, perfectly spiced jambalaya and Creole rice custard pudding. That was celebrity chef Kevin Belton's menu at the PBS North Coast's benefit dinner in October at the Carson Mansion's Ingomar Club in Eureka.

Not to worry if you missed the decadent affair. Belton has graciously shared the recipe for his coveted jambalaya so you too can taste a bit of New Orleans.

For those unfamiliar with Belton, you can tune in to PBS on Tuesday afternoons at 4 p.m. for Cooking with Kevin Belton, where you'll find him teaching the masses about Louisiana classics like gumbo, étouffée and eggs Sardou.

"I watched Julia Child on PBS, Justin Wilson and Paul Prudhomme," Belton said at the event. "I never thought I'd be doing what I do today. Now I'm on PBS and I've come full circle."

Belton, who hails from uptown New Orleans, is a self-taught chef. He describes his roots like "gumbo," having English, French, Native American and African ties. He learned many of the classic Creole and Cajun dishes from his mother and grandmother. He got his start as a young child, at 6 or 7, helping in the kitchen with little tasks like snapping beans, pulling shrimp and cutting lemons in half.

Since then, he's taken it up several notches. For the last 20 years, Belton has been teaching others how to cook Louisiana cuisine with his signature flare. He's got a big presence — he's 6 foot 9 inches — and has charisma audiences adore. Belton has a long-time affiliation with New Orleans' public television station WYES-TV, and he has been a featured chef on food programs in the U.S. and abroad.

In the Big Easy, he is also a well-known instructor at the New Orleans School of Cooking. There he gets plenty of requests for lessons on how to cook the one-pot meat and rice favorite jambalaya — the pièce de résistance at the PBS dinner prepared by Belton and Ingomar chef Dan McHugh and his staff.

Belton's red jambalaya is layer upon layer of flavor: a tad sweet from tomatoes and paprika simmered slowly with garlic, peppers and Creole spices; smoky sausage; and a slightly piquant bite that tingles the tongue but not overly so. With each incredible bite, you'll be reminded why New Orleans' food is frequently lauded as some of the best in the world. Bon appétit!

Belton's recipe, from his book Kevin Belton's Big Flavors of New Orleans, is reprinted here by permission of Gibbs Smith. It's relatively straightforward but I included some information in brackets to aid in shopping and preparation where unclear.

Chef Kevin's Jambalaya à la Big Easy

The trinity — onions, celery and bell pepper — make the classic base of this Creole rice dish. Jambon is the French word for ham. Laya is the African word for rice. It loosely translates as “gift of rice,” as the dish has evolved with other ingredients and substitutions. At the New Orleans School of Cooking, I believe I’ve demonstrated how to make jambalaya a million and one times. I’m not kidding. It is the number one requested dish by the visitors to the city. It’s interesting from the point of view of a culinarian that this is the only Louisiana dish where the rice cooks with the ingredients. Most Louisiana dishes are created and served over rice. Here rice is the heart.

Serves 4 to 6

1 cup chopped onion [1 medium onion]
1 cup chopped celery [3 stalks]
1 cup chopped green bell pepper [1 large]
4 tablespoons butter
4 cloves garlic, finely chopped
4 cups chopped chicken, dark meat preferred [2 pounds boneless, skinless chicken thighs]
1½ pounds smoked beef sausage, cut in ½-inch rounds [Andouille sausage]
2 ½ cups diced fresh tomatoes [5 Roma tomatoes]
2 tablespoons Creole seasoning [2 tablespoons Cajun seasoning + 1 teaspoon black pepper + 1 teaspoon dried oregano. For jambalaya with a fiery kick, add a few dashes of cayenne pepper or hot sauce.]
2 cups beef broth
1½ cups uncooked long-grain white rice
Kosher salt and pepper, to taste
¼ cup chopped Italian parsley
¼ cup chopped scallions

In a large heavy-bottom pot, sauté the onions, celery and bell pepper in butter over medium heat until the onions are translucent, about 8 minutes. Add garlic and continue to cook for 1 minute or until you can smell the garlic cooking.

Add the chicken and sausage and sauté for 2 minutes. Add the tomatoes and Creole seasoning and sauté for 2 more minutes. [Add 2 teaspoons salt if using a salt-free Creole seasoning.] Add broth and rice. Stir and bring to a boil. Reduce heat, cover tightly and simmer until rice is cooked, about 20 to 25 minutes.

Adjust seasoning with salt and pepper. Stir in parsley and scallions and serve immediately. ●

The Luck of the Irish?

Good People at Redwood Curtain

By Pat Bitton

frontrow@northcoastjournal.com

South Boston is blue-collar Irish through and through. A combination of shop work, factory work, informal childcare and bingo is how most of the community gets through life. Every so often, one escapes to a fancier neighborhood — through hard work, a lucky break or a mix of the two — to become what’s mockingly called “lace-curtain Irish” by their one-time neighbors in Southie.

How two of those old neighbors end up in wildly different places in life through the choices they make, and what happens when those choices collide, is the premise of David Lindsay-Abaire’s Good People, now playing at Redwood Curtain Theatre.

At the center of the story are Margie (Peggy Metzger), the middle-aged single mother of developmentally-disabled adult child Joyce, and Mike (Craig Benson), a successful fertility specialist married to Kate, an African-American professor of literature (Kenya Uhuru). When we first meet Margie, she is being laid off from yet another dead-end job by her exasperated manager Stevie (Matthew Atkins) because her landlady Dottie (Susan Abbey) didn’t show up on time to sit with Joyce. As Margie, Dottie and good friend Jean (Pamela Long) toss around ideas for how Margie can find a new job in time to pay next month’s rent, Jean comes up with an off-the-wall idea. Why not get in touch with Mike from the old neighborhood and ask him for a job? After all, once a Southie, always a Southie. And Southies are good people.

So Margie tracks Mike down to his fancy office (she tried calling but no one would put her through) and talks her way into his consulting room. Awkward catch-up small talk ensues but when the niceties run out, Margie gets uncomfortable with Mike’s status in life — the nice house, the pretty young wife, the five-dollar words. She accuses Mike of becoming lace-curtain Irish. Mike accuses Margie of being passive-aggressive. Eventually, if only to get Peggy out of his office, Mike invites her to his birthday party that weekend under the pretense that one of his “comfortable but not rich” friends might have work for her.

Peggy Metzger, Craig Benson and Kenya Uhuru in Good People.

Back in Southie, Jean is so delighted her plan is working that she comes up with another idea to extract money from Mike, but then Margie gets a call from Mike telling her the party’s been canceled. She figures she’s being blown off and decides to go anyway, setting in motion the unraveling of Mike’s carefully constructed lace curtains. Kate and Margie discover that they have a lot in common when it comes to dealing with white male privilege, especially with regard to Mike’s apparent willful amnesia concerning the reality of his life in Southie. As things begin to spiral out of (Mike’s) control, Margie chooses to drop Jean’s bombshell of an idea — that it’s possible Mike is Joyce’s father. Far from giving her back control of the situation, however, Margie finds herself in the firing line. How she gets herself out of it is a beautifully crafted exercise by Lindsay-Abaire that makes this play the masterpiece it is.

Metzger is quite simply extraordinary as Margie — a stunning performance that’s up there with Frances McDormand’s Tony-winning portrayal on Broadway. She lets us see just enough of the tough-but sensitive Margie that we can’t help but root for her as “good people,” despite her all-too-human failings. She’s simply too nice to follow through on the mean tricks the delightfully sly and snarky Long’s Jean tosses to her, or do anything other than agree to the veiled eviction threats issued by Abbey’s calculating yet ultimately sympathetic Dottie. Uhuru is a welcome addition to the growing roster of actors of color in Humboldt County, delivering a nuanced performance as she sets up, and then observes, Mike and Margie as they argue about choices, luck and hard work. Benson is very believable as the one who got away when reminiscing at a casual level but seems to be suppressing his inner Southie a little too much when the lace curtains get ripped away from his marriage — he just needs to let go a little more. Atkins, too, is a little timid; he shows promise as Stevie, but is not yet fully comfortable in the store manager’s skin; this should improve over time, since he turns out to be good people too, in the end.

The two-handed direction by Cassandra Hesseltine and Kaitlyn Samuel works surprisingly well; the vision is Hesseltine’s, but her film commissioner duties prevented her from handling the direction alone, so she recruited Samuel to handle much of the implementation. The result is a seamless production, thanks in no small part to Morgan Reeves’ flawless stage management. Robert Pickering’s muted scenic design makes great use of Redwood Curtain’s challenging space and Calder Johnson’s lighting design only enhances the atmosphere as it shifts in and out of Southie, ably underscored by Cory Stewart’s clever sound design. Catherine Brown’s costume designs are right on the money, especially Dottie’s best bingo outfits.

Three Native Artists Carry the Weight

Brittany Britton, Brian Tripp and Robert Benson at Piante Gallery

By Gabrielle Gopinath

artbeat@northcoastjournal.com

What They Bring, What They Carry brings together artworks by Brian Tripp, Brittany Britton and Robert Benson — artists of Karuk, Hupa and Tsnungwe descent, respectively, who grew up in and around reservations in the Hoopa and Two Rivers regions. Tripp and Benson, who have exhibited regionally and nationally for decades, use process to articulate connection to place. Britton, showing at Piante for the first time, makes art that is more conceptually driven. All three work with indigenous forms.

Benson grew up in Willow Creek. Britton was raised on the Hoopa reservation in a “dance family” that took part in traditional ceremonies. Tripp’s family came from near Somes Bar in the Two Rivers region but he grew up in Eureka. All three studied art at Humboldt State University — Tripp and Benson in the 1970s, Britton in the 2000s — and spent time out of state before returning to their native land.

The exhibition title carries both a literal and a symbolic charge, like many objects in the show, notably a Britton piece titled “Burden Basket (carry that weight).” The open weave net basket is laden with amorphous bundles mounted on a long stick for ease in carrying. The weave is traditional; the wire is glossed with red flexi-spray utility dip. Britton made the piece while she was living in Portland, Oregon, pursuing her MFA at the Oregon School of Arts and Craft. She drew on weaving skills learned from local native traditions and further developed at OSAC. She also relied on a timely assist from her mother and grandmother, who live near the Trinity River.

“I called and asked them to send me a box of river rocks in the mail,” she recalls, laughing. “I said, ‘Fill up a flat rate package with rocks from the river bar.’ They didn’t even ask any questions, just said: ‘How many?’” Once the rocks arrived, Britton swaddled them with pantyhose. Veiled this way, the stony forms look substantial and yet obscure. To see the way these burdens cluster in the bottom of the basket is to get a sense of the mass that belies their gauzy surfaces.

Britton often works this way, taking objects that possess significance in traditional culture, executing them in new materials and positioning them in novel contexts. Materials are fungible. Tropes turn into memes. “Beaded Lawn Chair” reproduces the familiar form of an affordable mass-produced outdoor furniture model made from aluminum tubing and nylon webbing. It’s important to know that this is not just any lawn chair but a replica of the one Britton’s great-grandmother, a Hupa medicine woman, brought with her to ceremonial dances. Britton has covered every inch of the chair’s surface in beading, embellishing and estranging its mass-produced form. The surface treatment recalls bedazzling, even as it nods to the persistence of indigenous pattern.

“A Measure of Something” consists of two multi-strand necklaces made of dentalia shells, which the Hupa once used as currency. These shells have been covered with gold and silver leaf. The forms are weighted with traditional significance but the flashy surface treatment makes them of the now. The piece’s title is the English translation of the Hupa word for money. “A lot of my titles are derived this way — they’re English translations of Hupa words,” Britton said. Because the languages are so different, “those translations sometimes possess this intensely poetic dimension.” The Hupa, she says, thought of money as an extension of the principle of measurement. Monetary value for them was not the prime directive it has become in advanced capitalism.

The necklaces are not meant to repose in a vitrine, and only one of them is for sale. Britton wears them in gender-bending drag performances that she describes as negotiations of identity: “Me grappling with ‘How do I articulate what it is to be

Native, and what it is to be Native and queer?” She calls the gold necklace, with its traditional form and blingy aspect, “an awkward catalyst. I wanted to take this traditional form, make it gold and over-the-top. Maybe queer it, in a way. In the objects I was making, I was imagining possibilities of being. What does a queer indigenous culture look like? Because we don’t know.”

In Britton’s work, the political is always personal and vice versa. In the anthropomorphic sculptures Karuk artist and poet Tripp has been making from found natural forms since the 1970s, the political is made manifest through nature’s forms.

“I spend a lot of time on the river bars, where the rocks and the driftwood lay in piles,” he says. “I see faces and I see arms — sometimes they pop right out.” Sometimes he touches the faces up with brilliant patches of red, black and blue. “Most of the time, I leave it pretty natural.” Tripp describes the sculptures he is showing as being made from minimally manipulated, found pieces of wood. Some of the faces he finds turn up in chunks of driftwood that wash up on the Klamath River bar. Others are made from madrone and manzanita (“wood that hasn’t been in the river yet”).

“You know what they say about Indians — that we’re close to nature,” Tripp chuckles. “And it’s true. In our religion we believe there’s life in everything. That’s what our religion is based on — recognition of ikx-aréeyav, the spirits that live in everything.” Like Shakespeare’s Prospero in The

Tempest, who can perceive “tongues in trees, books in the running brooks, sermons in stones, and good in everything,” Tripp sees the faces that shape themselves for the attentive viewer in the wood as ballast for this principle. “I have a stack of these sculptures I’m looking at right now. And they’re looking back at me. We’ve all been programmed to ignore these things when we see them,” Tripp suggests. “But they’re there for anyone to see, if they pay attention.”

“If you look at these things I’ve done,” the artist continues, “they’re so natural, there’s no denying them. You see what nature’s done in these things. And if you think about nature this way, if you realize that it has a spirit all its own — if you look at nature as something to live with — when it comes to scooping gravel out of the river bank, you might think about that differently.” It’s politics and geography converged. ●

Don’t miss the watercolors by Robert Benson, “Now is the Time to Go Up the Mountain” and “Fall River Fishing Place.” Benson began as a painter but sculpture has consumed most of his energies in recent years — which makes the unexpected appearance of these luminous, process-oriented works on paper all the more welcome.

What They Bring, What They Carry will be up at Piante Gallery at 620 Second St. in Eureka from Nov. 4 through Dec. 16. Call 441-1322 or visit www.piantegallery.com.

Keeping the Gray at Bay

By Collin Yeo

As November descends and the days turn grayer and shorter, our sweet Humboldt County begins to resemble the Asphodel Meadows of Homer's underworld or the garden of virtuous pagans in the first circle of Dante's Inferno. Limbo, in other words — everything around here can start to resemble a wet, green-gray limbo. Which leads us to a variety of options: Do we shack up with a new squeeze or a reliable old partner and burn through our Netflix queue like it's the end times? Or do we take up a new hobby like firing clay pots, macramé or arthropod dissection? Do we become one of those weirdos who swears they love hiking in the rain and can't see what all the fuss is about while cultivating a cold newt-like sheen of wetness on their clothes and face at all times, even indoors?

For me, it's a heady mix of all of the above (except for the grasshopper dissection, yuck), warmed and tempered by a steady stream of live music. Here are some glowing gems to brighten your darkening days.

Thursday

The Outer Space hosts an international indie and garage rock show at 7 p.m. with locals The Monster Women, Australia's The Fix Ups and Los Angeles' The Blank Tapes ($8).

Because of the refreshingly early 10 p.m. curfew at the Outer Space, you can double your pleasure most nights and catch another show in Arcata, and tonight is no exception. Seattle's Smokey Brights play the Jam at 10 p.m. (price TBA) and I think this band might surprise you as it did me because it has a really tight, clear and original sound. Led by husband and wife Ryan Devlin and Kim West, these Smokey Brights sound to my ears like '70s pop masters such as Big Star or the Dire Straits funneled through a low-key New Order rhythm-section filter. Everyone plays crisply and there are chords in there you don't normally hear in a rock band.

Friday

EPIC puts on its annual fundraiser at 9 p.m. at the Mateel Center in Redway to celebrate four decades of fighting the good fight against the planet-polluting plutocrats who seem to increasingly make up the top tier of the political class in this country. The folk music-heavy event features performances by Joanne Rand, Casey Neill and the Norway Rats, and Alice DiMichele. All proceeds will go toward EPIC's ongoing mission to stop the Big Guys from making our forests look like the collapsing world in the third act of The NeverEnding Story so I would consider the $20 ticket price money well spent.

Catch a bad one at Humbrews at 10 p.m. when innovative rapper, time-traveling visionary Gorillaz collaborator and cousin of Ice Cube Del the Funky Homosapien takes the stage in a much welcomed return to Arcata ($25, $20 advance). With special guests DJ Tyler and DJ D'Vinity.

Saturday

A couple of years and a lifetime of little social interactions ago, I met a nice man named Bear Dyken and helped him load his truck up with old solar panels donated by local solar genius and all-around nice guy David Katz. Bear told me about his long running activist folk group, Clan Dyken, and even though that type of music usually isn't for me, I was very impressed with the many environmental and social causes that Bear and company had raised money for over the band's three-decades-long run. Clan Dyken's Revive the Beauty Way tour is a fundraiser for indigenous people in the Big Mountain part of the Navajo nation in northern Arizona, who have been resisting relocation since the early '70s. It kicks off its Arcata stop of the tour at 5 p.m. at the D Street Neighborhood Center with local musicians Joanne Rand, Rob Diggins and Piet Dalmolen filling out the bill. The $10-$25 suggested donation seems like a bargain to help a great people retain their homes.

It's alive! It's alive! It's Art's Alive in Eureka! At 7:30 p.m., the Siren's Song has a raucous rock show with indie slammers Echo Rows followed by heavy Americana act Side Iron and melodic space bumpers Strix Vega closing out the night. All local bands, all free.

Seattle's Smokey Brights play the Jam at 10 p.m. on Thursday, Nov. 2.

Sunday

Uh-oh. What's that low rattle coming from G Street between 10th and 11th? Did a little Godzilla crawl out of the bay to seek the bright lights of our cozy college town? Did those awful yak guys return from a pilgrimage to India with elephants to better harass the dog walking population? Nope! It's another electronic show at the Arcata Theater Lounge with The Floozies bringing their Funk Jesus tour to the stage at 9:30 p.m. ($17). The Lawrence, Kansas, sibling duo of Mark and Matt Hill play live electronic tunes with sounds and samples that reference some of the space-jammed sections of the vinyl notebook of tunes and tricks. Disco dance DJ duo The Funk Hunters fill the bill with electro artist Maddy O'Neal opening.

Monday

Phoenix, Arizona's own power-violence monstrosity Burnout plays the Outer Space at 6 p.m. with local handsome duo of noisy weirdos Rush Hour IV starting the show ($5). Bring earplugs or start buying real estate in the muted nightmare that is my aural world. If you forget them though, this show is definitely worth the hearing damage to the loud and heavy music fan.

The Jam hosts cystic fibrosis survivors and brothers Evtan and Skip and their roots dub reggae band Indubious at 10 p.m. with their deep, heavy grooves, spiritual songs and tight vocal harmonies (price TBA). Zahira opens.

Tuesday

The popular Santa Cruz-by-way-of-Vermont bluegrass trio The Devil Makes Three plays the West Gym at HSU at 7:30 p.m. DMT are well-loved and respected in these parts but I am honestly excited about the entire show, as Texas native, one-man band, country-blues and punk-fried metal-playing badass and road-dog lifer Scott H. Biram inaugurates the evening. The $33 ticket for this line-up is a steal and the show will likely be packed.

Wednesday

The Old Steeple continues what has quickly become a stellar tradition of booking talented singer/songwriters to play its beautiful refurbished Methodist church hall. Portland's John Craigie is one such talented performer. Like earlier heavies like John Prine or Guy Clark, Craigie deftly offsets his deeply evocative and touching lyrics with a simple delivery and quippy one-liners between songs. Simplicity and sweetness are the métier for opening duo Hollis Peach. The baritone/alto interplay in the gorgeous vocal harmonies produced by Dan Sherrill and Jacqui Aubert are capable of both breaking the heart and swelling the soul to the surface of the skin. Show starts at 7:30 p.m. ($25, $20 advance).

Collin Yeo is an astronaut, nationally ranked bridge champion, former pro tem mayor of Carmel, California, midwife and full-time scurrilous and inveterate liar. When he isn't busy lying (which is never), he is a gardener, musician, handyman and writer. He lives in Arcata.

Full show listings in the Journal's Music and More grid, the Calendar and online. Bands and promoters, send your gig info, preferably with a high-res photo or two, to music@northcoastjournal.com.

Healing Arts

As most people know, it takes more than a few rolls of paper towels to restore electricity, food, water and health to an entire region decimated by a natural disaster. The catastrophic destruction and devastation in Puerto Rico caused by Hurricane Maria is one of the largest humanitarian crises in history. More than a month later, a majority of the area is still without electricity or cell service, with swaths of people unable to obtain food or clean drinking water. Hundreds remain missing. The response so far may not be "incredible," "amazing" or "tremendous," but we can make it better.

Dell'Arte International, with alumni currently in Puerto Rico, has a direct line to information on the devastation and what we can do to help. The school has partnered with Mano a Mano PR to host Humboldt Can Help - A Fund-raiser for Puerto Rico on Saturday, Nov. 4 from 1 to 6 p.m. at the Dell'Arte Amphitheatre (donation) to raise funds to buy supplies needed right now. The event includes theater, music, regional beer and food. With local musicians the Opera Alley Cats, Home Cooking, Bandemonium, The Vanishing Pints and the Arcata Interfaith Gospel Choir providing music for the event and Dell'Arte's The Mysterious Magical Brandishers of Magic and others performing. Come together with your local community to help members of your global community. Humboldt can indeed help. For more information on the event and to donate, go to www.dellarte.com, www.gofundme.com/humboldt-can-help or call 668-5663.

Dance Magic, Dance

Humboldt State University's Center Arts program brings diverse, world-renowned performers to the area to entertain and dazzle. This season's offerings have been impressive so far with Michael Franti and Spearhead, Emmylou Harris and Andrew Bird gracing area stages. With more on tap for the rest of the season (Bill Murray, David Rawlings, Pink Martini, anyone?) 2017-2018 is already one for the books. This week, the worlds of imagination and dance come alive with two awe-inspiring shows suitable for all ages. First up is the illusionist dance troupe, Momix, bringing its latest offering Opus Cactus to the Arkley Center for the Performing Arts on Friday, Nov. 3 at 8 p.m. ($25-$49). The world and wonder of the desert come alive as creatures slither and fire dance their way across the stage in a multimedia spectacle.

Next up is Flip FabriQue on Wednesday, Nov. 8 at 7 p.m. at Van Duzer Theatre ($25-$39, $10 HSU). This crowd-pleaser features the athletic and gravity-defying talent of performers from Cirque du Soleil and Cirque Éloize out of Quebec. It's an enchanting evening of storytelling, high-flying aerialist techniques and acrobatics sure to delight audience members of all ages.

Reviews

SUBURBICON has become the focus of much recent attention for doing Paramount's worst wide-release box office business, ever. The surprising element in this is not the movie's poor performance; rather, it's the confounding fact that Paramount put it in a position to fail as dramatically as it has. Who could have possibly thought that an allegorical thriller, suffused with racism and terrible violence and set in the 1950s — even starring Matt Damon — would win over the date-night crowd or the bored weekenders? Maybe the same person who, having seen the movie, commissioned a trailer that recast the thing as a dark comedy scored by DJ Shadow and Run the Jewels. Blame the studio for mishandling the movie, rather than the movie for mishandling the material.

I've been ambivalent about some of George Clooney's directorial efforts, sure. Confessions of a Dangerous Mind (2002), his debut behind the camera, set a high standard, with a customarily brilliant script by Charlie Kaufman and a delicious surfeit of style and detail. It also established some themes that have carried through: the mendacity of men in positions of power; the tendency of the world toward organized betrayal; and, ultimately, the importance of integrity, and of acting on it even in times of great challenge. The problem is Clooney's movies have addressed these themes with mixed success, though they have rarely failed from an esthetic standpoint. Their shortcomings more often are screenplays insistent on addressing that thematic material, rather than advancing a story. Good Night and Good Luck (2005), for its still-frame photographic gorgeousness, is a prime example, as is The Ides of March (2011). Placed in the context of the director's body work, Suburbicon becomes even more difficult to parse. It is a dark movie for darker times — the script, co-written by Clooney, longtime collaborator Grant Heslov and Joel and Ethan Coen, harkens back to some of the Coens' bleakest, most misanthropic work — heavy on style and even heavier on Message, that could easily be seen as muddled or overworked. For me, the elements combine quite well, resulting in a troubling, resonant, relevant movie worth revisiting. It has its flaws, and is certainly not for all tastes, but it is ambitious and artful, and overall more successful than not.

Into 1959 Suburbicon — a Levittown-style suburban utopia, so basically a living hell — moves the Mayers family. This proves problematic because the Mayerses are black. Town hall meetings are called to order, florid white men scream nonsense in unison and eventually a fence is erected on the perimeter of the Mayerses' property. As events more central to the movie's story play out, said fence is increasingly lined by hateful, drum-beating neighbors attempting to drive the new family out.

Next door, the Lodge family, opting out of the neighborhood's actions, undergoes its own maelstrom of chaos and violence. Rose (Julianne Moore), sickly and confined to a wheelchair, is assisted in the day-to-day by identical twin sister Margaret (Moore again). Gardner (Damon), a vaguely important financial executive, barely keeps it together. He has squandered the household finances, in the process incurring significant debt to some unsavory characters. Two of these characters come into the Lodge home one night, tie up the family, including young Nicky (Noah Jupe), who becomes our lens for narrative, and begin a cycle of violence that, by the end, will become almost all-consuming.

Some will say the allegorical aspects of Suburbicon are forced or heavy-handed. I would counter that they are, for their heavy-handedness, an appropriate reaction to an unbelievably divisive, historically ham-fisted time in our history. Clooney, Heslov and the Coens have created here the type of imagined reality to which MAGA dipshits seem so anxious to return. It is a heightened reality, to be sure, where a vacuum of kindness and empathy creates a hospitable environment for avarice and race-hate. There is nothing great about this version of America, except the hope that youth will buck its trends and see kinship instead of otherness. Maybe it just suits my mood. And like all of Clooney's movies, it is a pretty thing to look at, even in its moments of extreme ugliness. Its created world, with its style of mid-century mundanity, all right angles and short-sleeved shirts with ties, is richly captured by Robert Elswit's cinematography and subtly underlined by Alexander Desplat's score. It is a difficult, imperfect work and I enjoyed it. R. 105M. BROADWAY.

THANK YOU FOR YOUR SERVICE.

Written and directed by Jason Hall, who adapted the screenplay for American

Sniper, details the attempted return to normalcy of multiple Iraq tour soldiers rotating back to the world. At the center of the story stands Adam Schumann (Miles Teller), a sergeant who holds himself responsible for the death of one of his men and the grievous injury of another. His best friend and squad-mate, Solo (Beulah Koale), has suffered a subtle but devastating brain injury that leaves him unable to contend with civilian life but unfit for military service. As each tries to navigate the difficult world of life in general and the department of Veteran's Affairs in particular, it becomes clear they need more help in healing than is readily available.

Thank You takes on an ever-more important topic of discussion, and does so with some aplomb and the help of an excellent cast. Overall, though, it never quite rises to the significance of its subject. R. 108M. BROADWAY.

Previews

BLADE OF THE IMMORTAL. From director Takashi Miike, a samurai cursed with immortality (Takyua Kimura) helps a girl (Hana Sugisaki) avenge her murdered family. R. 140M. MINOR.

BOY (2010). In 1984 in the New Zealand sticks, a Michael Jackson-obsessed kid (James Rolleston) reunites with his criminal father (Taika Waititi). NR. 87M. MINOR.

DELORES. Documentary about Dolores Huerta, activist and union organizer alongside Cesar Chavez, and her struggles with police violence, and raising 11 kids. Damn. NR. 95M. MINIPLEX.

LUCKY. The legendary Harry Dean Stanton (RIP) stars as a 91-year-old man having an existential crisis in a small, dusty town with a missing tortoise. NR. 88M. MINIPLEX.

BLAZING SADDLES (1974). Cleavon Little, Gene Wilder and Madeline Kahn in a work of genius by Mel Brooks and Richard Pryor. R. 93M. BROADWAY.

Continuing

AMERICAN MADE. Tom Cruise and director Doug Liman find their groove in this entertaining true story of a pilot in over his head with cartels and the CIA in the 1980s. Cruise adds self-doubt to his usual bravado and Sarah Wright and Domhnall Gleeson shine in supporting roles. R. 115M. MILL CREEK.

BLADE RUNNER 2049. Director Denis Villeneuve cleaves to the DNA of the original — talky and broody, but gorgeous in its decrepitude, which will surely please hardcore fans more than general audiences. With Ryan Gosling and Harrison Ford. R. 163M. MILL CREEK.

THE FOREIGNER. Jackie Chan drops his trademark grin for a grim mask of revenge in this sure-footed actioner about a man seeking revenge against his daughter's killers. But between fight scenes, the plot is all over the place. With Pierce Brosnan. R. 114M. BROADWAY.

GEOSTORM. Those weather-controlling satellites the guy on the plaza is always talking about finally berserk and attack Earth. Gerard Butler stars and presumably saves the day by tossing rolls of paper towels. PG13. 96M. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK.

JIGSAW. Still more strangers thrown together and turning on one another in a gratuitous game of random torture. Except in a horror movie instead of our national political hellscape. R. 91M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

KINGSMAN: THE GOLDEN CIRCLE. Director Matthew Vaughn's spy comic adaptation sequel is cartoonish, ultra-violent and silly. It's also gorgeously constructed and uniquely entertaining. Starring Taron Egerton, Colin Firth and Julianne Moore. R. 141M. BROADWAY.

ONLY THE BRAVE. Director Joseph Kosinski and a stellar cast (Josh Brolin, Miles Teller, Jennifer Connelly) exceed disaster movie expectations in a tragic, emotionally truthful film about complicated people and relationships in a hotshot fire crew. PG13. 133M. BROADWAY.

TYLER PERRY'S BOO 2: A MADEA HALLOWEEN. Perry pulls the wig back on as the mouthy matriarch in a slasher send-up set at a haunted campground. PG13. 100M. BROADWAY.

VICTORIA AND ABDUL. An aging Queen Victoria (Judy Dench) bonds with Indian clerk Abdul Karim (Ali Fazal), who becomes her adviser, tutor and confidante. PG13. 111M. BROADWAY, MINOR.

NOTICE OF PETITION TO ADMINISTER ESTATE OF PIERRE HENRI LEFUEL aka PIERRE H LEFUEL aka PIERRE LEFUEL CASE NO. 170297

To all heirs, beneficiaries, creditors, contingent creditors and persons who may otherwise be interested in the will or estate, or both, of PIERRE HENRI LEFUEL aka PIERRE H LEFUEL aka PIERRE LEFUEL A PETITION FOR PROBATE has been filed by Petitioner, MARY LEFUEL AND MARK J. MARTIN

In the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt. The petition for probate requests that MARY LEFUEL AND MARK J. MARTIN be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent.

THE PETITION requests the decedent's will and codicils, if any, be admitted to probate. The will and any codicils are available for examination in the file kept by court.

THE PETITION requests authority to administer the estate under the Independent Administration of Estates Act. (This authority will allow the personal representative to take many actions without obtaining court approval. Before taking certain very important actions, however, the personal representative will be required to give notice to interested persons unless they have waived notice or consented to the proposed action.) The independent administration authority will be granted unless an interested person files an objection to the petition and shows good cause why the court should not grant the authority.

A HEARING on the petition will be held on November 16, 2017 at 2:00 p.m. at the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt, 825 Fifth Street, Eureka, in Dept.: 4. IF YOU OBJECT to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney.

IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within the later of either (1) four months from the date of first issuance of letters to a general personal representative, as defined in section 58(b) of the California Probate Code, or (2) 60 days from the date of mailing or personal delivery to you of a notice under section 9052 of the California Probate Code. Other California statutes and legal authority may affect your rights as a creditor. You may want to consult with an attorney knowledgeable in California law.

YOU MAY EXAMINE the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a Request for Special Notice (form DE-154) of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in Probate Code section 1250. A Request for Special Notice form is available from the court clerk.

NOTICE TO POTENTIAL BIDDERS: If you are considering bidding on this property lien, you should understand that there are risks involved in bidding at a trustee auction. You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid at a trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to fee and clear ownership of the property. You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property. NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER: The sale date shown on this notice of sale may be postponed one or more times by the mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee, or a court, pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code. The law requires that information about trustee sale postponements be made available to you and to the public, as a courtesy to those not present at the sale. T.S. No. 057080-CA APN: 306-151-001-000 NOTICE OF TRUSTEES SALE IMPORTANT NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER: YOU ARE IN DEFAULT UNDER A DEED OF TRUST, DATED 5/3/2007. UNLESS YOU TAKE ACTION TO PROTECT YOUR PROPERTY, IT MAY BE SOLD AT A PUBLIC SALE. IF YOU NEED AN EXPLANATION OF THE NATURE OF THE PROCEEDING AGAINST YOU, YOU SHOULD CONTACT A LAWYER

On 12/1/2017 at 11:00 AM, CLEAR RECON CORP., as duly appointed trustee under and pursuant to Deed of Trust recorded 5/14/2007, as Instrument No. 2007-14938-16, and later modified by a Loan Modification Agreement recorded on 03/18/2016, as Instrument 2016-005039, of Official Records in the office of the County Recorder of Humboldt County, State of CALIFORNIA executed by: JESSE D ARIAS III, AND LORI A ARIAS, HUSBAND AND WIFE AS COMMUNITY PROPERTY WITH RIGHT OF SURVIVORSHIP WILL SELL AT PUBLIC AUCTION TO HIGHEST BIDDER FOR CASH, CASHIERS CHECK DRAWN ON A STATE OR NATIONAL BANK, A CHECK DRAWN BY A STATE OR FEDERAL CREDIT UNION, OR A CHECK DRAWN BY A STATE OR FEDERAL SAVINGS AND LOAN ASSOCIATION, SAVINGS ASSOCIATION, OR SAVINGS BANK SPECIFIED IN SECTION 5102 OF THE FINANCIAL CODE AND AUTHORIZED TO DO BUSINESS IN THIS STATE: IN THE FRONT ENTRANCE OF THE HUMBOLDT COUNTY COURTHOUSE, 825 5TH STREET, EUREKA, CA 95501 all right, title and interest conveyed to and now held by it under said Deed of Trust in the property situated in said County and State described as: MORE FULLY DESCRIBED ON SAID DEED OF TRUST The street address and other common designation, if any, of the real property described above is purported to be: 6214 PURDUE DR EUREKA, CALIFORNIA 95503-7047 The undersigned Trustee disclaims any liability for any incorrectness of the street address and other common designation, if any, shown herein. Said sale will be held, but without covenant or warranty, express or implied, regarding title, possession, condition, or encumbrances, including fees, charges and expenses of the Trustee and of the trusts created by said Deed of Trust, to pay the remaining principal sums of the note(s) secured by said Deed of Trust. The total amount of the unpaid balance of the obligation secured by the property to be sold and reasonable estimated costs, expenses and advances at the time of the initial publication of the Notice of Sale is: $94,207.94 If the Trustee is unable to convey title for any reason, the successful bidder's sole and exclusive remedy shall be the return of monies paid to the Trustee, and the successful bidder shall have no further recourse. The beneficiary under said Deed of Trust heretofore executed and delivered to the undersigned a written Declaration of Default and Demand for Sale, and a written Notice of Default and Election to Sell. The undersigned caused said Notice of Default and Election to Sell to be recorded in the county where the real property is located. NOTICE TO POTENTIAL BIDDERS: If you are considering bidding on this property lien, you should understand that there are risks involved in bidding at a trustee auction. You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid at a trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to free and clear ownership of the property. You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property. NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER: The sale date shown on this notice of sale may be postponed one or more times by the mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee, or a court, pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code. The law requires that information about trustee sale postponements be made available to you and to the public, as a courtesy to those not present at the sale. If you wish to learn whether your sale date has been postponed, and, if applicable, the rescheduled time and date for the sale of this property, you may call (800) 280-2832 or visit this Internet Web site WWW.AUCTION.COM, using the file number assigned to this case 057080-CA. Information about postponements that are very short in duration or that occur close in time to the scheduled sale may not immediately be reflected in the telephone information or on the Internet Web site. The best way to verify postponement information is to attend the scheduled sale. FOR SALES INFORMATION: (800) 280-2832 CLEAR RECON CORP. 4375 Jutland Drive San Diego, California 92117
